Eating Well

According to Dr. Stephen Barrett in his recently published book The Health Robbers, Americans pay over one billion dollars every year to health food rackets. Many Americans are on a back to nature kick and are spending more money than they should for foods grown on farms that claim to use only natural fertilizers. There is nothing wrong with using these fertilizers; however, when their use rather than the use of the synthetic fertilizer increases the cost of the food, then the consumer is wasting money.

In order for a plant to grow its roots must absorb dissolved minerals. The majority of these are provided by the soil in which the plant is growing; however, under agriculture conditions the soil may become depleted in one or more of these minerals. Fertilizer is mixed in with the soil in an attempt to replenish these necessary plant nutrients. From the point of view of the plant, the origin of these nutrients makes no difference. Mineral nutrients are taken up and used by the plant no matter what the source: nanure, compost or synthetic fertilizer. If a plant has enough nutrients, and is free of disease, it grows.

Studies conducted at Cornell University for 25 years and at the British Experimental Farm for 34 years indicate there are no significant differences in the nutrient content of foods grown on soils provided with natural or synthetic fertilizers. The genetic make-up of the plant to a large extent determines its food value. For example the amount of vitamin A in lettuce cannot be made to equal that found in carrots.

A soil deficient in one or more minerals may support plants also deficient in those minerals. For example the iodine content of a play may vary with the iodine content of the soil. The best way to insure proper mineral composition of the soil is to analyze the soil and determine what is missing, and then add the needed chemicals. Although manure is a good fertilizer it may not give a deficient soil exactly what it needs. If animals are fed plants deficient in minerals then the animal and its waste may also be deficient.

FOOD AND MARKETING

Lower prices to farmers are holding retail prices for U. S. farm foods nearly steady this fall despite continued upward pressure from marketing and distributing costs. Average prices for foods which do not originate on U. S. farms are also stabilizing following their rapid increases earlier this year when coffee prices zoomed. As a result, average grocery store food prices during the fourth quarter likely will be little changed from the previous quarter. Due to earlier increases though, fourth quarter grocery prices are expected to average about 7 percent above a year ago.

Price increases for away-from-home eating, which are influenced even more heavily by cost increases beyond the farm, likely will slacken only a little from the rate that has persisted through most of 1977. This would bring these prices during the last quarter of 1977 to about 8 percent above a year ago.

Among major food categories, retail meat prices, on the average, will likely hold steady this fall with modest reduction for pork offset by small increases for beef and other red meats. With both the farm value and market spreads (or the cost from farm to consumer) sharing the gain, fourth quarter retail meat prices may average 4 or 5 percent above a year earlier.

Poultry prices will decline seasonally during the fourth quarter. Egg prices will follow in contrast to their sharp increase this time last year.

Virginia Girl Earns National 4-H Food Preservation Award

Chicago, Ill. - Five 4-H members from Virginia claimed $5,000 in scholarships at the 56th National 4-H Congress here this week. Each was named a winner in programs arranged by the National 4-H Council and supervised by the Cooperative Extension Service.

Of the five winners from Virginia, one was an 18-year-old youth who became such an expert on canning and freezing that she wrote three booklets, has been named one of national winners in the 4-H food preservation program.

Patricia Gail Wise of Route 2, Dillwyn received a $1,000 scholarship from the Kerr Glass Manufacturing Corp oration, sponsor of the 4-H food preservation program.

Winners were presented their awards at the 56th National 4-HCongress in Chicago, November 27 - December 1.

Miss Wise, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry E. Wise, is a high school senior and plans a career in dietetics. She is a nine-year 4-H'er.

The Buckingham County girl's three booklets are entitled "Canning," "Freezing," and "Preserving for Fun." The 4-H'er said that her farm family raises a hugh garden every summer and that as a young girl she quickly learned that the way to get away from insects and dirt at harvest time was to offer to help with the canning and freezing.

Patricia Gail Wise

Miss Wise said that one of the things she liked about food preservation was that it could be tied in with other nutrition areas, such as outdoor cookery, and dairy foods. Her other projects have included clothing and dress revue.

During their visit in Chicago, the 4-H'ers toured the museums and other points of interest. They sang together, worshipped together, and rapped with business executives and other delegates from across the country in numerous mini assemblies.
